Why is Clearcoat Film Build so Important?

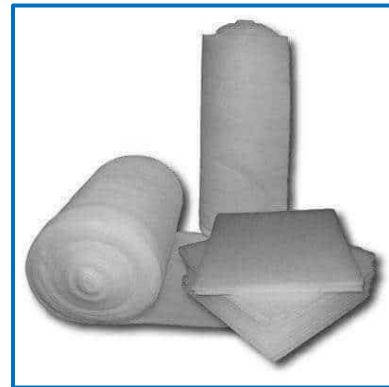

Clearcoat is one of the most important parts of a quality paint job. From a simple repair to an overall job, the final appearance is most notable. It is what people see first. In order to maintain a quality finish, the film build of your clearcoat is very important. Film builds that are too high or too low can diminish your hard work. Dry film builds in the range of 2-3 mils is most commonly recommended. When spraying any clearcoat for the first time, it is recommended to measure your film builds. This will help you gauge how your application techniques affect final film thickness and then adjust accordingly. So next time you are getting ready to pull the trigger on your clearcoat, remember this tip to produce a quality finish for long-lasting first impressions.
